Global Highlights

Politics and Diplomacy

From September 8 to 13, 2025, Nepal experienced unprecedented Gen-Z-led anti-corruption protests that escalated into violent clashes, including gunfire and widespread vandalism, resulting in over 75 deaths and extensive damage to public and private property, while disrupting businesses and essential services. The unrest prompted the resignation of Prime Minister KP Sharma Oli and key ministers on 9 Sept 2025. Sushila Karki was appointed interim Prime Minister on 13 Sept 2025, the first female leader in Nepal's history, tasked with guiding the nation through a critical transitional period.

The crisis drew global attention, highlighting the growing power of youth activism and raising concerns about Nepal's political stability, economic losses, and investor confidence. Domestically, it underscored the urgent need for governance reform, strengthened security measures, and the restoration of public trust.

The UN General Assembly High-Level Week (Sept 23-29) saw world leaders debate security, climate, and aid under the theme "Better together". Globally, the assembly served as the primary stage for multilateral diplomacy, highlighting both cooperation and deep divisions on ongoing conflicts and climate financing. For Nepal, the discussions on climate aid and sustainable development are directly relevant, providing a platform to advocate for increased support and international attention for its vulnerability to glacial melt and natural disasters.

Economy and Energy

- The EU announced measures in mid-September to tackle eight critical power-grid bottlenecks and reported high gas storage levels for winter. These actions are crucial for ensuring energy security, stabilizing electricity prices, and bolstering the EU's resilience against potential supply shocks. For Nepal, this demonstrates the global push for modernizing energy infrastructure, a key lesson as it develops its own national grid and seeks to expand cross-border electricity trade, particularly with India.
- China's manufacturing PMI data in late September showed activity hovering around the contraction threshold of 50. The continued weakness in the world's second-largest economy suppressed global demand for raw materials and raised concerns about a broader slowdown in world growth. For Nepal, this translates to weaker demand for its exports and potentially less investment from China, a key source of foreign direct investment and infrastructure loans.

Foreign Aid and Trade Relations

- The U.S. announced plans on Sept 24 to reprioritize ~$1.8 billion in foreign aid toward "America-First" initiatives. This shift raised concerns among multilateral agencies about reduced funding for global health, climate adaptation, and development programs in low-income countries. For Nepal, which relies on such aid for budgetary support and key projects, this could lead to a reduction in critical grant-based assistance, forcing a search for alternative financing.
- The India-EFTA Trade & Economic Partnership Agreement (TEPA) took effect on Sept 30, widening tariff concessions. The deal strengthens economic ties between a major emerging market and a bloc of developed European nations, creating a new axis of trade and investment. For Nepal, it underscores the importance of strategic trade pacts and could offer a case study for its own negotiations, though it also risks making Indian manufacturing more competitive relative to Nepal's.

Environment and Climate Updates

- Climate Week NYC (Sept 21-28) saw record-scale events focusing on finance and adaptation ahead of COP30. The gathering highlighted a growing push for private-sector climate pledges amid political headwinds, setting the agenda for critical international negotiations. For Nepal, this is a vital platform to showcase its climate vulnerability and lobby for the loss and damage funding, and green technology transfer it urgently needs.
- A World Meteorological Organization (WMO) seasonal outlook in September signaled abovenormal temperatures for most of the Northern Hemisphere. The forecast reinforced the long-term trend of global heating, with implications for agriculture, water scarcity, and extreme weather events. For Nepal, this predicts accelerated glacial melt in the Himalayas, increasing the risk of GLOFs and threatening long-term water security for millions.

Health and Safety

- The amended International Health Regulations (IHR) entered into force on Sept 19, strengthening global rules on disease reporting and preparedness. This legally binding update enhances the world's collective defense against pandemics by ensuring faster, more transparent information sharing between countries. For Nepal, this mandates critical upgrades to its national disease surveillance and health emergency response systems, which is essential for a country vulnerable to cross-border health threats.
- The European Centre for Disease Prevention and Control (ECDC) reported active monitoring of multiple threats in mid-September, including Ebola, dengue, and West Nile virus. This reflects the persistent and diverse nature of global health threats in an interconnected world. For Nepal, it emphasizes the importance of aligning its national health alerts with international advisories and preparing its systems for a range of potential imported cases.
